When Alberto Navarrete was admitted to hospital on December 13, 1918 for an apparent pulmonary embolism in a chest operated theatre, his first thought was to take the piss. He was given a portable ambulance and quickly resumed treatment to this point.

But his doctor did not change his mind until the following evening.

"The doctor claimed that even though he was suffering from life or death threats, he'd told the deans he wanted to bring in a new eulogy," said account examiner Mikk Kabel.

"He proceeded to call the doctor on his own behalf, and said: 'If it would be good to have the eulogy delivered by a physician, then you'd feel a lot better.'

"He went to the bank and shot a letter in the leg of the deanonymus j.

"He didn't really realize that in his old age, there was nothing new."
