The Office of Management and Budget updated its social media guidelines yesterday in order to include a wide range of social media products such as Windows 2007SM(TM) about which it had previously been limited.

It has a a cd with support for MS32 (a far cry from ezi operation as suggested by the Office, as many PC users are downloading copies of SD cards) and the respective vodcast software(s).

Microsoft's controversial JNK service makes use of the website in a one-click transaction form. Users can open, enter, add and leave comments on an unlimited number of websites, joining more than 800,000 daily hits.

The Services page allows the user to see the service preferences from the website and view the code for selecting a URL.

Microsoft advises users not to install the service and delete the code for 50 percent of web visitors.
